Education in our country today has become entirely meaningless, even harmful. It is distressing to find that during all these years of our independence we have been merely dabbling in schemes and projects, in new-fangled ideas mostly borrowed from the west; merely setting up commission after commission at the cost of lakhs of rupees, and let the matter rest at that. The drive, the initiative, the dynamic vision necessary for radical reforms in sphere of education are lamentably conspicuous by their absence. We have allowed matter to drift aimlessly, instead of settling down to grapple with momentous issues. The result has been disastrous. A lifeless, mechanical system of teaching in overcrowded schools and colleges imposed by far from competent teachers on students whose only interest is to get through the examination, has been the fame of our education. We have completely forgotten the simple yet vital truth that the aim of education is first to build up character in the widest sense, and then to impact knowledge.
